

Travis Scott Astroworld Tragedy

By: Blaise Seifert

On Friday the Travis Scott Astroworld two day concert began. Within only the first day of it being open, many tragedies occurred with the death of nine people which consisted of Franco Patino, John Hilgert, Brianna Rodriguez, Rudy Peña, Danish Baig, Jacob Jurinek, Axel Acosta, Madison Dubiski, and Bharti Shahani. These beautiful souls were killed by some having passed out and falling to the floor and being crushed to death and some were suffocated due to the packed crowds. Many say that these deaths happened at the fault of Travis Scott by inducing the extreme acts that happened in the crowd.

Throughout the concert many reported that Travis had his fans fight each other and ask them to break down barriers. Videos to videos flooding YouTube and Tik-Tok of fans rushing to light crew and to the front of the crowd to Travis himself asking them to pay attention to the death and injuries that were happening. After the first night Travis

Scott made a public post apologizing to the family's of those who had passed. He had also reported that he would be working closely with the police to figure out how this all happened, but many believe the only reason this happened was because of Travis himself and his violent requests for the crowd.

As more information comes in and the story becomes clearer, hopefully there are legal actions taken for the lives of these nine people and the story can come to a close. But for now many people's minds have been made up until there is some breaking information that could spin the story in a different direction. Thankfully, Travis Scott did report that he would work with every victim's family by providing them with financial help with the funerals. For now that is as much information that we have based solely on facts, information, and news reports.