

Why Chimps are Hellish Nightmare Creatures

By Alex Taft

The end of humanity is a complex subject that has been theorized for an uncountable sum of years. Some believe that nuclear warfare will mark the end of the human race. Some believe the earth could be shot out of existence by a solar laser from space. Some believe that artificial intelligence will eventually become too powerful, and kill all humans in a robot revolution. I believe that the mass requiem will be brought upon all of us by Chimpanzees.

Chimps are horrifying. According to environmental scientist Madison Dapcevich, chimps have been known to sometimes kill and eat full-grown leopards. Just imagine being a leopard walking around in the Gabonese rainforests, just trying to hunt some small animals so you can survive and keep living your life. Then suddenly, a bunch of overgrown gremlins just jump out from the bushes, beat you to death with their smelly, HIV-riddled Sapien hands, then eat your corpse.

The BBC reports that an average Chimp is 1.5 times stronger than an average human. Now, you may be thinking that if Chimps are just 1.5 times stronger than us on average, then that means gorillas will mark the end of the world, as they're much stronger than Chimps. However, here's the key difference: gorillas are gentle giants, but Chimps are out for blood. THINK OF THE LEOPARDS. What other species of animal that can stand on two legs can you think of that go out of their way to hunt giant death cats? Exactly. Point made.

As we all know, Chimps also have opposable thumbs. This means that they can grab and use basically anything a human can. Now hear me out: Chimps with crossbows. God save us. Take a trip with me for a second; inhale, exhale, and open up your brain. I'd like for you to visualize yourself walking around the neighborhood. The sun has just awoken from what has seemed like an all too long slumber, the birds are singing the song of a new, glorious day, a scent of spring, a scent of new opportunity, blooms into the atmosphere. It's simply a plain and beautiful day. Then suddenly, a gang of Chimpanzees with crossbows pulls up on you in a 2007 Ford Taurus, then shoots you point blank with a 350 foot per second bolt of pure pain.

In conclusion, Chimps are petrifying, and will inevitably end the human race. All we can do now is wait for the inevitable, and pray that our new Chimpanzee overlords will choose to not kill all of us.
